LETTER FROM FOUCHE
To the Duke of WELLINGTON

A legislator of antiquity celebrated for his wisdom, Solon, after long convulsions, on the day of the return of order, placed reconciliation, and the public peace under the guarantee and protection of heaven: I recommended this example, my Lord, to the King for his imitation; I appeal to your testimony, the weight of which lies as much in your character as in your reputation.

The evils were great. It was necessary not to be deceived respecting the remedies; our welfare, our social existence, depended on it; my voice was drowned by that of the passions; the councils of moderation were represented as a snare; and senseless men, in the wanderings of their understanding calumniated at once my administration under the Republic, under Napoleon, and under Louis XVIII.

I should unwillingly occupy Europe with my long and laborious administration, if it were not connected with the knowledge of the truth. I shall represent facts in order and unsophisticated; many are unknown, others disfigured, I shall adduce all the causes of our great events: I have seen close at hand the secret springs which set the passions in motion: I shall explain that revolution by which France was changed from an ancient monarchy into a republic, became then the empire of Napoleon, and then the kingdom of the Bourbons. While I am employed on this most important work, for it shall serve as materials for history, I feel it necessary for myself to believe that it will be regarded as a new proof of my love of my country.

But, my Lord, time flies, and I know not whether things may not have changed before my memoir is ready. Meantime I will comply with the wishes of those who urgently desire that I would enlighten public opinion upon relations which are personal to me, and which have been strangely disfigured. Nobody can better do justice to my sentiments and principles than your Lordship. From the 19th of June, the day on which I had first the honor of corresponding with you, till the moment that I left Paris, my whole political conduct lies open before your eyes. I know, my Lord, that you on all occasions, solemnly and completely do me the justice which I invoke: it is for that very reason that I take the liberty of addressing to you the account I mean to give, that you may find in it new arms for my defence. I am by no means afraid of increasing your claims to my gratitude: I feel that my heart is rich enough to satisfy them.

The circumstances respecting which information is desired, relate, 1st, to the return of the King: 2d, to my acceptance of the Ministry of the Police: 3d, to the ordinance of the 24th of July: and 4th, to my mission to Dresden, and the circumstances which prevented me from entering into the Chamber of Deputies.

I was President of the French government when the armies of the allied powers were advancing against Paris. Napoleon had abdicated, but was still at the Elysee, and desired to be as general at the head of the French army. This offer could not be accepted: eleven hundred thousand foreign bayonets had penetrated on all sides into our territory, and we had not an hundred thousand men under arms. The retreat of the army was therefore resolved upon, and Napoleon invited to leave Malmaison, to which he had retired to embark for the United States. He might misinterpret my ardent representations to this end: in adversity the soul is easily accessible to suspicion: but I am at least certain of having deserved none. I had not served him like the courtiers, nor did I follow their example by abandoning him with his good fortune. Nobody appreciated more than I did the power of his genius, but at the same time nobody was more convinced that his presence must plunge France into the lowest abyss of misery.

I therefore conjured him to leave the continent. The French army, mindful of its glory, did not count its enemies, but burnt with impatience to measure itself with them, only those who, like you, my Lord, are acquainted with its valor, know how to appreciate the merit of resignation which is showed in the retreat.

In the fearful crisis in which we were, it was difficult to take part without exciting suspicion. In France people were much divided on the choice of the monarch who should succeed Napoleon: it was feared that reaction and vengeance might follow the return of the Bourbons. People could not persuade themselves that a dynasty, which had suffered so much by the revolution, could sincerely forgive it: the evils that were feared might be imaginary: but these are precisely the most dangerous, because they have no limits, and there are no remedies for them.

All those who, during the last 28 years had acquired in the civil or military career, consideration, property, and reputation, beheld in the recal of the Bourbons a subject of cruel and gloomy apprehensions: one party desiring a foreign Prince who would more impartially confirm what was established: another declared for the Regency; but a Regency that should have governed in the name of the wife and son of Napolean would have given too much credit to the idea that Napoleon himself governed; this thought exposed France and Europe to reciprocal apprehensions.—A part of France named the Duke of Orleans; the personal qualities of this Prince, the remembrance of Jemappe, and some other of the victories of the Republic with which his early youth was connected, an entirely new social compact which it was natural and easy to conclude with him, and his name of Bourbon, which could not be pronounced in the interior, and but might be advantageously employed in the negotiations, with the foreigners—these and other causes shewed in the choice of him a prospect of repose even to those who did not find any happiness in it. Others insisted on the principles of legitimacy; but they applied them falsely: this principle is nothing but a political law proper to every nation where it is received; it confers on every country great advantages because it prevents disorders and troubles; but in respect to the rights of nations, it is no law. Legitimacy between Sovereigns is but a consequence of the recognition of each of them; war and conquest abolish this recognition, and consequently this legitimacy; the partition of Poland is a proof of it

Napoleon might be legitimate or not he was so, however, for every other Sovereign than Louis XVIII, he would have been overthrown nevertheless. With the principles that now predominate in Europe, it would be necessary to make war upon that Monarch who would take it into his head to act like Napoleon; nay the principle of legitimacy, even considered as merely a political law of the country, is liable to important exceptions. Montesquieu supposes, that the relation between a dynasty and a people may become so intolerable, that this law must be absolutely changed in order to save the country itself.

My correspondence with the ministers of the high allies, and with the generals of their armies, will be annexed to my memoir: it will show how I know how to assert the dignity of the nation. There were naturally and intentionally different shades in the negociations; I hoped that my proofs would give more weight to each of my demands. In however desperate a situation affairs may be, they are still secondary points upon which one may lay hold; for in the loss of independence there are various gradations of misfortune. People form a very false idea of the situation in which I was when they reproach me with not having asserted the right of the nation to choose its Prince, and to fix the conditions of his power. Both questions were decided by the force of circumstances, the present lay no more within my power, all would have been easy had Napoleon abdicated at the field of May. His too late removal bowed us under the yoke of events; I believe that necessity acquits me of all reproach.

The real difficulty has not been properly conceived; those who wished to remove the Bourbons imagined that the choice of the Prince who was come to govern France was but of subordinate interest; it ought to have been seen that the question was to be considered in another manner. People affirm I tamed the energetic dispositions of the army; those who believe that, know not the disproportion of our strength; new miracles of valour would have served but to risk the flower of our army, and we should at the same time have exposed the capital to all the terrors of an armed invasion: the greatest danger to a country in the dissolution of all social bonds, which destroys at the same time public and private prosperity, and leaves no hope and no future (prospect).

Amidst this conflict of opinions, Louis XVIII. was approaching Paris; wherever the foreign armies were he was proclaimed. It was hence to be forseen, that the same spirit would produce the same appearance in the capital. The King was at St. Denys where I had the first conference with your Lordship. At Neuilly I did not seek to palliate the fault of those who had betrayed the throne; but I affirmed, that from the moment that his throne was re-established, it was the King's interest to amalgamate all in a punctually followed system of mildness and oblivion; what in a well ordered state of things is wisdom may be madness in a moment of confusion; several persons who were under the suspicion of treachery had been merely led astray upon the path into which the crisis had conducted them. Prudence required much circumspection in respect of them, as long as any body does not believe that he has left the path of his duty there is still a possibility of bringing him back to it,

For an unknown and vain man, a Ministry may have charms even when attended with dangers, because he does not see them, but for me it could no longer be an object of ambition. All was confusion, hindrance, and danger. When people saw me accept of the Ministry, they might have believed I intended to illustrate my death as I had honoured my life

My views my lord, obtained your approbation; the ideas of moderation appeared to gain strength as you became the organ of them; in the unparalleled relations, & considering the highest post in which we stood, this interview must have a powerful influence perhaps on the eternal fate of France and of Europe the next day I used the same language to the king, when I had the honor to see him at St. Deny's, and delivered him a letter, in which I said to him with frankness whatever seemed to me most calculated to gain him all heart, to unite all parties, and to bring us unison with the principles and wishes of the monarch. My open language seemed to make an impression on the king: he was sensible that we wanted repose, in order to collect again all the elements of order which time and misfortune had dispersed, that it was necessary to cover all faults by boundless benevolence, and employ all possible means to encrease all feelings of sincerity. This conversation, which I sought to circulate among the public gave reason to presume that we were at the end of our troubles and our dissensions: but the French people desired something more than presumptions. Only the positive can guarantee what is not so.

Some reproach me for having accepted from the king the ministry of the police. Undoubtedly it was safe for me, after the capitulation, to withdraw from public affairs, but it was greater to face events. Those who had accompanied the king in his adversity came back with strong preconceived opinions with respect to our situation: they were in a dreadful error. Time, which destroys every thing, had not been able to destroy their prejudices; several of them brought back their antiquated routine as experience: was it now, in my situation, the most sacred duty to meet these clouds, and endeavor to dispel them? Was it carrying simplicity too far, when I hoped that by spreading a light over all objects I should soften hostile sentiments, moderate the opinions even of the most violent men, subdue every one to duty, to prevent re-action? It is well known where re-action begins, but it is not known where they can be commanded to stop: at least, the first heat discharged itself almost upon me alone, and it did not develope and extend itself till after I left Paris. My entrance into business was an act of self devotion, a real sacrifice.

If I had, had personal views, I should have inflamed still more the generous indignation of the army, instead of suppressing it; I should not have trembled at the thought of the destruction of the blood which would have filled Paris. In this, ambition might still have found its account; in the part which I took there is to be seen only the resolution of a well disposed man.

It is all comprehensible that low ambition might have been content with getting into the administration on condition of becoming the docile tool of a party: but at the elevation to which my conscience and the esteem of the public raised me, could I ever make any condition of my services besides the national interest? Let my letter to the King at St. Denys be read, at the moment I accepted the Ministry: it is printed in the Moniteur. Have I compromised my principles? Does my language give any party hope that I will let it predominate as the conqueror.

Let people judge of my actions and words, not comparitively from one time to another, but according to the standard of what was said and done around me when I spake and acted. If I could not rule events I have at least certainly done everything to oftens the violence of their course. Have I not been constantly seen between the oppressors and the oppressed? But I will not make myself more generous than I am: already has experience taught me, that people are much often moderate, calm, and reasonable in adversity, than in prosperity.

I find myself between two parties: the one reproaches me for having served the King, the other makes a crime of my having been in the service of Napoleon.

This last party no longer remembers that it feared him less in proportion as I was nearer to him. What did I say to him when he returned from the Isle of Elba? I conjured him not to disgrace the nation by groundless amnesties, and I incessantly repeated to him that he must seem to be ignorant of every thing.—My whole career, as Minister, has proved but one thing—that I gave the duties to the country the preponderance above every other. It is solely to the reputation which I enjoyed in the opinion of the nation that I owed my offices under the several governments which succeeded each other, and which went to ruin. Because, I ventured to assert it, they rejected the truth, which I had the courage to lay open to them.

I was confused at the reproach which was cast upon me of having deceived the King respecting the love of his people to him. What base flattery! People are not ashamed to tell an enlightened and judicious prince that after twenty five years absence he has suddenly become the object of universal love, of the love of a nation, whose generations several times renewed, had been brought up in passions and convulsions, in principles so wholly opposite to love of the Bourbons!—What assurance to hold such language after witnessing what passed on the entrance of Napoleon into Paris when he returned from Elba, when the Burbons could not find a single place of refuge in France! No: I was not perjured when I begged the King to transmise people's minds of the idea of security, there was no other means to be by the state, and give security to the throne.

Pardon was a part of justice. We can deny in our days that political storms are not the storms of calculation and the work of individuals, but that s involuntarily hurried along their vorex?

Tolerance has its conveniences, but ould the so very complicated circumtances of the capitulation that was igned, admit of no other treatment, another system? Every measure of severity, after the proclamation of the king hat had been published, seemed to give he lie to the word he had given. One could no longer depend no longer on ay one thing, if the convention concludd yesterday was not to be valid the fol-owing day.

At what moment was it more necessa-y that every one should be convinced hat the word of the King was sacred and rrevocable? The slightest, the most rifling appearance of any violation whatever of the obligations entered into, must wound every feeling, the dreadful suspicion of having been deceived, seized again upon all minds and confidence vanished on all sides and forever.

The King could only show generosity and regularity, arbitrary act laid the foundation of a dangerous opposition.
How punish? where cease? And if there is no limit, how shall confusion come to repose! Full and unlimited amnesty was necessary, precisely because punishment was impossible, unless one could again expose one's self to the greatest difficulties.

However, I removed from Paris those whose presence there would have been improper, I caused passports to be given them, and I confess it, even procured for several the means of which they were destitute to retire.

This measure did not give satisfaction.
adversity does not always confer judgement; they (ay) could not comprehend that it was possible to reign without a list of proscription; then as now, every one desired to see his enemy upon this list. The ministry left upon it only those names which it could not remove from it.

All minds were beforehand penetrated with the idea that the throne had been overturned in consequence of an extensive conspiracy: that a great number of persons was involved in the plot, which had placed Napoleon again upon the throne: that the majority still cherished a certain aversion to the government, the development of which might one day disturb Europe.

With all my might, and in every possible way, I have combatted this unhappy error; it was so general, and so deeply rooted, that even those were silent who had the most interest to dispel it. Solemn trials have now justified my words and my writings.

To be Continued.

ANCONA, August 3.

The St. Joseph, captain Herbert, of Marseilles, put into this port on the voyage from Africa, declares, that the Dey of Tunis had engaged a corsair who had captured a French vessel, and that the ship is restored to captain Didier who commanded her.

The same captain Herbert relates, that several works of defence have been constructed on the coast front of Bona; that at Algiers all the ramparts are mounted with cannon taken from the vessels, and, he adds, that the Algerines have a considerable camp at Tremesin, near the aqueduct of Barbasou, which is protected by a torrent.

The mountain which faces the sea is occupied with bastides, having gardens surrounded by walls; on several point-forts are erected—the Algerines intend to retire within these bastions should the town be bombarded—they are all supplied with water, and the orchards that surround them from little woods, which render them very agreeable;—the most common tree in the country is that kind of fig called the Christian.

The Dey of Algiers has not at present 12,000 militia, but if war should break out, he can easy assemble from 30 to 40-000 men. It may easily be imagined, however, that such troops could not keep the field long, for as they have neither magazines nor munitions of war, & live entirely on pillage, they must soon exhaust the country they occupy.

A prejudice prevails here against the English, who are regarded, perhaps very unjustly, as the cause of the misfortunes of the Christians in Africa. Had they shewn themselves in the character of masters, it is certain that the governments of the Regencies would have liked nothing better than to have made a solid peace. Conditions may be presented to them, and securities taken; but to do so, is treating with them as between power and power. Contributions are paid them, and far from humiliating them, their insolence is augmented. Italy suffers much from the actual state of things.
Her shores are constantly menaced; and as the pirates are not to be destroyed, they will only suspend their depredations in order to recommence them.

ALEXANDRIA.

MONDAY, October 14.

Interesting Letter.—We have commenced, in the preceding columns, an interesting letter from the Duke of Otranto to Lord Wellington, in relation to the late counter revolution in France.—This letter was first published in the Bremen Gazette in August last: and the Boston Daily Advertiser, from which we copy it, mentions that it will form a part of a volume of documents which is now publishing in England.

From the Ohio Trump of Fame

SIR—Yours of the 26th ult. requesting information respecting the melancholly event which took place here on the 21st came to hand this morning.

I was not an eye witness of the distressing scene; but have had a relation of it from several who were present standing on the shore, and from others who had just escaped a watery grave.

On Wednesday the 21st of August, about 3 o'clock, P. M. a beautiful schooner about 80 tons burthen, was made ready for launching. A number of ladies and gentlemen were invited to take seats on the deck; to which a respectable company acceded. The vessel went off in very handsome style, rode on her destined element, with a kind of grandeur, pleasing to the friends of commerce, and highly gratifying to our wishes for improvement.

After she had ran out her usual distance she was brought up to the wharf, and an additional number of gentlemen, their wives and children went on her deck, making in the whole about 180 souls on board—A number of the young men went aloft, some at mast head, others in the shrouds: she was then hauled off a little distance from the shore, and their being no danger apprehended by the gentlemen they began running from one side to the other, to put her into a rocking motion & there being no ballast in her hold, and so many aloft, after changing sides on her deck with a pretty quick motion a few times, she capsized plunging from her decks about one hundred and fifty men women and children into the water.

The screams of those who were not buried in the water were piercing; those on shore flew to their relief: several good swimmers acted with the utmost deliberation in saving numbers who are almost drowned. Several women and some men went down a second or third time and were so far gone as to lose all hopes of being saved. But wonderful to relate, all were extricated, but six young men, and one boy, who were destined to rise no more until death had closed their mortal existence. Four young men were carried down, her side chains in her rigging; one leaped from her shrouds as she was going over, struck on the keel, slid into the water and rose no more. The other two were plunged from the deck. The young men were all promising respectable men. Their names are Amos Bacheldor, jur. Eli Hart, Harvey Cook, John Warner Wm. Pratt, Sylvanus W. Keeler, Rollin Newel,

The day following the funeral was attended by the largest assemblage of people ever before convened in this place. A sermon was delivered from this passage, "Be ye also ready," appropriate for the occasion. After the sermon the bodies was decently interred. All serious and feeling attention was paid, on the occasion, that could be desirable.

Yours respectfully,
JOSEPH BADGER.

Mammoth Cabbage.—A cabbage of the enormous size of four feet circumference, and weighing 16 pounds, exclusive of the stalk and loose outside leaves, was produced the present season, from the garden of Mr. Amos Freeman, at Prospect Hill, Bloomingdale.

N. Y. Mer. Adv.

Geneva, N. Y. Oct. 3.

The southern and eastern papers announce heavy falls of rain and high freshes. In this part of the country we have had no rain of consequence for some weeks. A great part of the corn in this quarter was very backward owing to the cold during the early part of the season. Through the course of the summer the weather was more favorable, and the prospect of the farmer began to brighten with the hope of a plentiful harvest. But the severe frosts which were experienced through the course of the last week have almost blighted their hopes. Many fields of corn and buckwheat have been destroyed, and is only fit for cattle.

A Day at Madrid.

I wake—'tis four o'clock in the morning! The whole broad street of Alcali is spread before me like an immense square—churches, palaces, and convents, at the further end the shady walks of the Prado—a grand sublime sight baffling description.

The matin bell announces the early mass, the streets become more animated—Veiled women in black men in long brown cloaks with redisillas, wearing their hair in a kind of net work, hanging low down their back. The doors of all the balconies open, and water is sprinkled out before every house.

Now the goat keepers with their little herds enter the gates, crying milk, milk! got's milk! fresh and warm! who will have any? There I see market women pass by with their asses loaded with vegetable, bakers with bread, in carts made of Spanish reed—water carriers and porters hastening to commence their day's work, while with a hoarse voice two consequential looking alguazils proclaim the theft committed on the preceding night.

By degrees, all the warehouses, shops, and boothes, are opened. The publicans (taberneros) expose their wine cups; the chocolate women get their pots ready—the water carriers begin to chaunt their "Quin bebe?" (who'll drink?) and the hackney coach and hackney chaise drivers, with the persons who let mules for hire, take their usual stands.

Soon the whole street resounds with various cries of numberless criers—Cod white cod! Onions, onions from Gallicai! Walnuts walnuts from Biscay!—Oranges, oranges from Murica! Hot smoked sausages from Estramadura! Tomates, large tomates! sweet citrons' sweet citrons! Barley water! ice water! a new journal a new gazette! Water-mellons! Long Malaga raisins! Olives, olives from Seville! Milk rolls, fresh and hot Grapes grapes! Figs, new Figs! Pomegrantes, pomegrants from Valencia!

It strikes ten; the guards mount, dragoons, Swiss regiments, Walloon guards, Spanish infantry, "Also ples vin Donne Manuela!" (Let us go to mass.)

All the bells are ringing, all the streets are covered with rock roses, rich carpets hanging from every balcony, and altars raised on ever square, under canopies of state. The procession sets out. What a number of neat little angels, with paste board wings, covered with guilt paper! images of saints with fine powdered bob wings, and robes of gold brocade! What swarms of priests! How many beautiful girls! all pleasant and in mixed groupes.

The clock proclaims noon day. We return through the square of the Puerto del Sol. All the rilus [raffles] have begun, all the hackney waiters are busy, and the whole square thronged with people.

One o'clock—we are all called to dinner: a great deal of saffron; many love apples, plenty of oil and pimento! But then, wine from La Mancha, oil Ceres and Malaga! What a nice thing is Spanish cookery.

La Siesta! La Siesta! Senores! A deadly silence is in all the streets, all the window shutters are put up or the curtains let down; even the most industrious porter stretches his length on his mat, and falls asleep at the fountain with his pitcher behind him.

At four o'clock every body repairs to the bull fight, to the canal, or to the prado all is gaiety and merriment, one equipage after another drive full speed to those places of deversion.

The Puerto del Sol becomes as crowded as before and the water carriers and the orange women, the procuresses of the frail fair, are all as busy as bees.

Thus passes the afternoon: and the dusky shades of evening set in at last. All the bells, ring, and every Spaniard says the prayers of salutation to the virgin.

Now all hasten to the tertulias and theatres, and in a few minutes the rattling of carriages resounds in every street. The lamps before the houses or the images of the Virgin, are already lighted; the merchants and dealers have illuminated their houses and shops, and the sellers of ice, water, and lemonade, their stalls. Every where are seen rush lights, paper lanterons, and pougies on the tables of fruit women and cake men.

Mean while the crowd on the square has prodigiously increased, and it is soon stowed with people. In one part you will hear the soft sounds of the guitar, or scnuidilla; in another, a female ballad singer tells in rhyime the tale of the last murder committed; in a third a thundering, missionary attempts to move the hearts of obdurate sinners while the light footed Cyprian corps carries off his audience by dozens. Soon passes the rosary and tattoo with music and the equipages return from the theatres.

It grows still later; the crowds begin to disperse—by one o'clock in the morning all the streets are still quiet, and only here and there resounds a solitary guitar through the solitary gloom of night.

SULLY FOR SALE.

THIS estate, situated in the county of Fairfax, twenty-two miles from Alexandria and the same distance from Georgetown, contains about seven hundred and fifty acres. Little River Turnpike passes through it half a mile from the dwelling house. The situation is handsome, and remarkably healthy; the water is good and abundant. The soil, which was originally excellent, has for some years past had the advantage of improving husbandry, Plaister of Paris acting with powerful and immediate effect on all grasses and grains. The fields present a good surface for cultivation; and those, now untilled, are covered with red clover. The orchards are very large and thrifty; the collection of table fruit is choice and various. The mansion is spacious and well constructed; the outhouses are all conveniently situated; those for farming purposes are expensive, and excellent in their kind.

For a gentleman of leisure this would be a delightful residence; and a profitable estate to an active farmer. The title is indisputable, and perfectly unincumbered.

A number of well taught orderly young men, with good stocks and farming utensils of all kinds, and the crops of the present year if desired, will be at the command of the purchaser.

Application may be made to the subscriber, living on the premises, next the post office at Pleasant Valley, in Fairfax.
